BETTER THAN A SAVINGS BANK.

The consecration of the Christian to the service of his Master will, if complete, include his property as well as his time, his talents and his influence. He will feel that he is only a steward of God's bounty, and that he is under obligation to use that bounty for the benefit of his fellow men. Thousands realize this obligation, and contribute liberally to promote the benevolent enterprises of the age. Many would regard it a privilege to give not only the whole of their income above their present necessities, but the accumulations of past years, and would do so but from fear that the vicissitudes of fortune, or the infirmities of declining years, may render these accumulations necessary for their future support. Hence, as they do not like to place their property entirely beyond their reach, they retain it in their hands, with the trouble and expense of its management; and finally, being called suddenly away, with no time to make their wills, it is left to those who may have no need of it, and thus their benevolent wishes are defeated.

But we have a plan to suggest which will enable such persons to do good with their money at once, and at the same time provide equally well, if not better, for their future needs. The plan is to deposit such sums as they can spare from time to time with the AMERICAN PEACE SOCIETY, and receive its obligation to pay the interest on the same annually in the publications of the Society, and the principal in money, at such times as it may be called for during the lifetime of the depositors, or, if not called for then, to be a donation to the Society at their decease. Thus these sums will all be within their reach at any time, if needed, and if never needed by them, would be made sure to a cause of vast importance to the world.

This plan was not of our own seeking, but was first urged upon us by our friends. It began with one in Pennsylvania, who sent us One Thousand Dollars, on the condition that we should allow him five per cent. interest during his life. We gave the obligation desired; but to the day of his death, he sent us every six months his receipt for the interest as a donation to the cause. Another friend, much younger, has at different times already deposited Seven Hundred Dollars on the condition stated in the preceding paragraph, expecting never to call for anything except the interest, but having the right to require the principal at any time, if he wishes.

Now, are there not thousands more who will loan to the Society such sums as they can spare, on these terms, instead of making additional investments, which may result in their own disadvantage, and that of those who would inherit them? Such help will be very opportune now, when the Society is making special efforts to extend its operations, and the publications to be furnished as interest, and which can be sold or given away, will exert a powerful influence for good hereafter. We think such deposits will be quite safe, as the Society, with a liberal charter from the State of Massachusetts, already has permanent funds more than sufficient to cover all deposits that it will ever consent to receive on the conditions proposed.
